One early Sunday morning, an old man decided to go for a walk. His wife told him to take his cane, but he refused, saying, "I'm not that old yet." As he walked down the street he saw that some dogs had chased a cat up a tree and were barking loudly. He shooed the dogs away and tried to find something to help get the scared cat down from the tree. Just then he turned around, thinking to himself, "I wish I had my cane..." when he saw his wife. She was walking slowly towards him saying, "See I knew you would need this today." He smiled and said, "I love you."

Jackson was running fast, but he wasn't sure if he was going to make it to the end. He looked to his left and saw another runner coming up behind him slowly. He thought to himself, "Oh great! Another Saturday track-meet, and another chance to come in last place." Jackson was not feeling happy about always coming in last place, as he really tried his best and worked hard. All of a sudden, on the last lap of the track, he felt energy push him a little faster as he chanted, "Not this time! Not this time!" Twenty seconds later he crossed the finish line panting and breathing hard. He started to laugh and then yelled, "Yes! I got 4th place, yes!" everyone laughed and clapped for him.
