1.

One Friday night, a cat was walking towards a blue house. The wind was howling, and the moon was bright. Suddenly the cat heard an owl hooting in a tree nearby. He kept walking quietly towards his target, a nice shiny bowl of cat food on the back porch of the blue house. As he began to eat the food he heard a loud noise stomping and tromping closer and closer. A moment later he was knocked into the bushes as his friend, Boomer the dog, burst through the doggy-door. Boomer panted and licked Winston, and the cat just kept trying to eat his food.

Charlie liked meeting new people. Every day at lunch he would hurry up and eat his food, then try to find somebody new to talk too. He thought he knew everyone at school, their name, their age, and what they smelled like. Sometimes people sounded annoyed when he tried to touch them to see if they were close by, or walking away. One day he met a new girl named Patty at lunch. As he tried to reach for her, and get closer, Patty sounded worried. "Hey, what are you doing?" Charlie apologized and said, "I'm sorry I scared you. My walking cane helps me find out where I'm going. My hands help me find where people are. It's hard for me to know where people are when it's noisy."
